

What did Romans wear under their tunics? That's an extremely personal question! If you must know, men and women wore a loincloth (subligaculum). It was a loose-fitting cloth worn around the hips like a kilt. (This was the only thing that gladiators wore under their armor!) Women wore tight linen or leather bands around their chests. They were the equivalent of corsets, but some wore them over their tunics rather than underneath.

MOST MEN WORE WHITE-COLORED TOGAS. DARK ONES WERE WORN DURING TIMES OF MOURNING.

WEIRD WORLD

LIKE US, THE ROMANS COULD BE VERY VAIN. BALD MEN GREW THEIR HAIR LONG ON ONE SIDE AND COMBED IT OVER THEIR HEADS, WHILE PEOPLE WITH BREAKOUTS STUCK CLOTH PATCHES OVER THEIR PIMPLES.

Heavyweight garment

Over the tunic, male Roman citizens wore a heavy robe called a toga. Its name probably comes from the Latin word tegere, meaning "to cover"—which is exactly what it did. Made from a single piece of fabric, semicircular in shape, the toga was large enough to cover the man from
