

THE ROMAN WOMAN IN THIS PAINTING HOLDS A STYLUS AND A WAX TABLET. THE MAN CLASPS A BOOK ROLL.

stopped their studies by this age and stayed at home until they got married. The elementary school teacher was a grammaticus. Boys attended this school, also behind a shop, for up to 5 years. They learned the rules (grammar) that governed the Latin language, read books by famous authors, and learned Greek—the Roman Empire's second language.

From the age of 14 or 15, a few boys were taught by a *rheto*r, who had a proper schoolroom, and was paid by the state to teach boys oratory (public speaking). Pupils learned how to speak fluently, ordering their thoughts clearly and choosing their words carefully. By the age of 20, these young men were ready to start their working lives. Those who had

THE LIBRARY OF CELSUS AT THE ROMAN CITY OF EPHEBUS, TURKEY, ONCE HELD 12,000 BOOKS.