

The princesses rode in the carriage procession, wearing pink dresses and straw hats. Yet the family was concerned, because when the King made his 1935 Christmas radio broadcast, he sounded very sick.

The Christmas vacation was spent at Sandringham in Norfolk, where Elizabeth walked with her grandfather on one of his last outings. On January 17, she returned home with her parents. That same day, the King, now kept in bed, wrote in his diary that he felt “rotten.” Three days later, he died. News flashed around the world: “The King is dead ... Long live the King.” Elizabeth’s uncle was the new king—King Edward VIII, and Elizabeth had moved up one place in the line to the throne.
